

I subscribe to XM Satellite Radio. Now I can drive coast to coast and never worry about finding another station every 50-100 miles. And now they offer weather & driving conditions in several cities. But the broadcast people have a problem with this. They are getting into local information.

I hope the FCC is smart enough to know that this is a free country and the broadcast giants are using politics again (as they did with TV) because they cannot compete. What they don't know is that many of us live in remote areas where satellite radio is the only signal there is after the sun sets.

I cannot see any support for any limits to XM Radio. Don't devalue my subscription by limiting the scope of XM Radio.
